By Paul Gogarty, one of the country’s leading travel writers and author of The Coast Road – A 3,000 mile journey round the edge of England .

Bounded by the North Sea and the rivers Crouch and Blackwater, the Dengie is a beguiling mix of the country’s richest arable farming, thatched and weatherboarded villages like the sublime Tillingham, and moody end-of-the-earth saltmarshes.

In centuries long gone, Dengie Fever was something farmers’ wives worried about contracting as they assisted their husbands in the mosquito-infested swamps. Nowadays Dengie fever is something everyone, happily contracts as soon as they step into this wonderfully remote land of mussels, markets and marshland whether they’re writers, painters, filmmakers or holidaymakers (the landscape reputedly gave Hitchcock the idea of The Birds, & Orwell used it as setting for Martian landing in War of the Worlds).

For the active, there’s walking, cycling, horseriding and aquatic sports at the Bradwell Outdoor Centre. For foodies there’s some of the country’s finest seafood and a food trail linking local farm producers. And in Burnham-on-Crouch, the major town of the Dengie, you get the lot – great places to stay and eat, riverside walks and pubs, art galleries, gorgeous Georgian homes and even an eccentric octagonal bell tower, Burnham’s best known landmark, you have to duck your head under on the High Street. Burnham is the major yachting centre on the eastern seaboard and nicknamed the Cowes of the East, hence it comes as no surprise that it has four yachting clubs (and the Royal Corinthian Yacht Club’s home is considered an Art Deco masterpiece).

To get a real feel for the very special beauty of the area I strongly recommend a walk along the northernmost promontory where the misanthropic Saxon chapel of St Peter’s (or St Peter-on-the-Wall) at Bradwell looks out over mudflats, cockle spits and hovering kestrels and hen harriers. St Peter Ad Murum is reputedly the oldest complete church in England that is still in regular use and is the scene of an annual ecumenical pilgrimage on the first Saturday of July each year. Its construction by St Cedd, who sailed from Lindisfarne to preach here, marked both an end to Saxon pirateering and the first foothold of Christianity in the South. The chapel was built from the walls of the Roman fort of Othona in 654AD - an intimidating fortress at the mouth of the Blackwater that was erected to protect the estuary from the Saxon pirates. Today, the location of Othona remains a major archaeological site and part of the Dengie National Nature Reserve.

8. Bradwell Outdoors
Land based activities including: archery, mountain biking, canoeing, crabbing, sailing available for young people and adults at our waterside site. Dinghy, offshore and powerboat training also available.

The atmosphere here is like no other and the saint’s word - “In this place the word is revealed to you” – still reverberates. A six-mile waymarked Wildside Walk round the promontory leads through the SSSI, passing grazing ponies, rare coastal flora, breeding coastal birds (the Bradwell Bird Observatory is located close to the chapel), old WWII pillboxes, 7th century fish traps and Shell Beach - a 30-acre treasure trove of mostly oyster and cockle shells. Today, the location of Othona remains a major archaeological site and part of the Dengie National Nature Reserve. It’s a hugely important conservation area with 750 acres lying below sea level and protected by sea walls. The starting and end point for the circular walk is the car park for St Peter’s chapel.

Attractions along the route

1. Burnham-on-Crouch Museum
A local museum, situated on the Quay, devoted to the history of the Dengie Hundred area from Neolithix to the present. The museum consists of two floors of exhibits of maritime, agricultural, industrial and social history. The archive contains photographs, drawings and documents. There is a regular programme of special exhibitions.

2. Creeksea church
Rebuilt in 1878 to a design by F Chancellor but incorporating some features of the 14th Century Church in the south porch and doorway. The interior has a 15th Century font and a brass and sword of Sir Arthur Harris who died in 1631.

3. St Mary’s church
It has often been referred to as the cathedral of the marshes. A church was first recorded on this site in 1155 although the current St Mary’s Church is of 14th century origin. Construction was mainly of ragstone although there are traces of roman bricks which may have come from a roman villa which is rumoured to have stood nearby.

4. Mangapps Railway Museum
Extensive collection of railway relics of all kinds, working steam and diesel locos, carriages, wagon, historic buildings and 1 of the largest collections of signalling equipment open to the public. Most of the collection is under cover. Train rides through pleasant countryside. Special events include Santa special trains during December.
Tel: 01621 784898

5. St Lawrence Rural Discovery Church
This active rural parish church, situated on a hilltop overlooking the Blackwater Estuary provides exhibitions and community activities. Light refreshments available.
Tel: 01621 779319

6. St Peter-on-the-Wall
St Peter’s on the Wall is probably the oldest surviving church in England. It is also the sole monument to Celtic Christianity in Essex (the former kingdom of the East Saxons). The chapel was built by Bishop Cedd around 654AD, almost entirely of Roman material from the fort of Othona (a small display inside explains its history). Othona was one of the nine Roman forts built along the south east coast to repel Saxon invaders. The fort has long since been eroded by the sea and buried inland. Evening services are held every Sunday during July and August at 18.30 hrs.
